VETERAN____ from Page One

He was severely wounded when a fellow soldier dropped a gun that fired, sending a bullet into his groin.

Medics tended to him as best as possible but left him on a roadside, where he lay from noon until after dark.

He was retrieved and transported to a field hospital in Germany, but doctors refused to remove the bullet for fear of damaging a major artery near the wound.

The shell remains lodged there to this day.

Incredibly, that wasn't the end of Sears' combat and he saw more fighting after recovering.

After the German surrender, his battalion was to be repositioned in China, as the War against Japan continued in the Pacific.

They were halfway across the ocean, when President Harry Truman gave the order to drop the atomic bomb on Japan, leading to the country's surrender and the end of the war.

Sears was discharged on November 29, 1945.

He has since attended numerous reunions of the survivors of his battalion, as well as visited their training locations in the U.S. and even some of their battle zones in Europe through the years.

Many of his fellow battalion veterans are as close as family he says.

But nobody is as close to Sears as his Lord, whom he prayed to regularly while serving his country.

"I talked to the Lord many times in the three years I was in the service," he said. "I told Him, if He would get me back home, I would serve Him as long as I live. Now, at 90, I can say I have tried to serve Him and work in my church every week for almost 70 years."

Sears, along with veterans across the nation, will be honored many times over this weekend as Americans observe Veterans Day, celebrated each year to mark the armistice signed 94 years ago this weekend when major hostilities of World War I were formally ended at the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month of 1918.

"I'm proud to be a veteran," Sears said. "But even more, I'm proud to be an American."
