GOODFELLOWS

this year by Co-chiefs Jeff Davis and Larry Gilbreath.

"By combining what we do, we feel like we can help more people," Gilbreath said. "And with the two groups working together, it also gives us more people to help put it all together. It just makes sense so we don't have duplication of services."

The group is requesting that city churches collect the names of families they know to be needy and submit them to the Goodfellows Committee no later than Friday, Dec. 7.

The names of suggested families can be submitted by churches and the XYZ Interfaith Center to Mary West at City Hall.

Brownfield citizens and businesses annually donate thousands of dollars worth of food and toys, which are delivered to homes throughout the city on Christmas Day or Christmas Eve each year.

The Co-chiefs stressed the importance of providing a good address with each application so the holiday goods can be delivered to the families who need them.

"It's a lot of work beforehand but it's absolutely worth it when you see these kids and families when you deliver them," said Davis. "Sometimes it's evident that what we're giving them is all they're going to get and the appreciation they have is very humbling."

The Christmas meal and gifts will be delivered at 8 a.m. Christmas Eve morning this year. The group will help children up to the age of 14 and each child gets at least one new toy.

"Brownfield is a special place and we take care of our own," Davis said. "This is a special project every year and even when the economy is down and we expect donations to slip, the people of Brownfield come through and help out those among us who are less fortunate. That's what the holidays are all about."

Only children living in the household and dependent on the family for their needs should be submitted. If the address of the residence is in a rural area of the county, directions to the home should be included.

It also is important to distinguish if the children are boys or girls so the appropriate toys can be delivered to each home. All donations should be forwarded to City Hall.
